Richard Wine needs a roommate for his dorm at the university of south carolina, but is worried that the housing application does not have enough options for describing yourself and is not helpful for finding multiple possible roommates in the case that he does not like one.

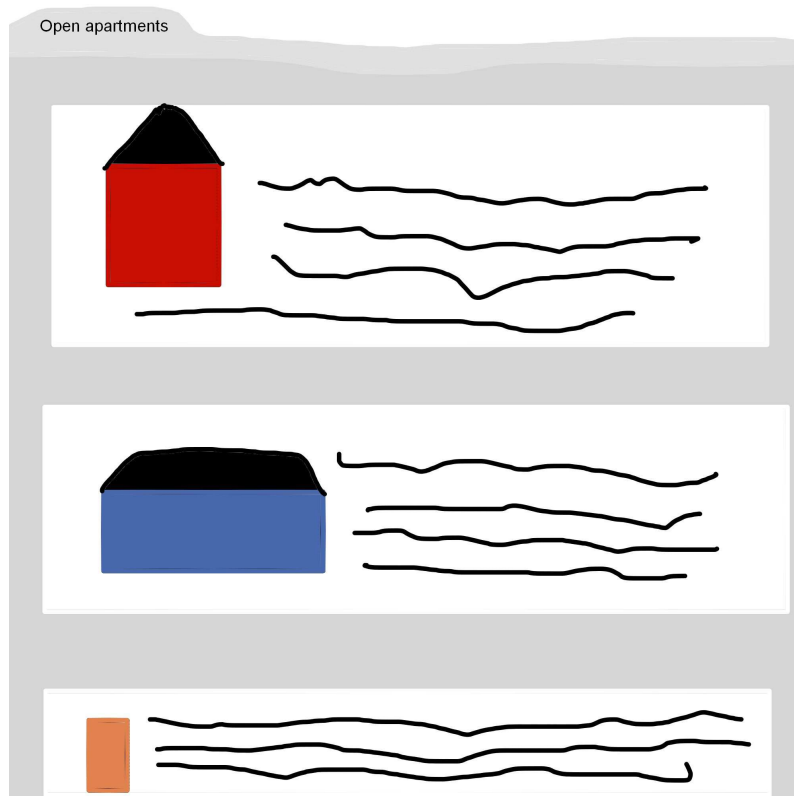

Richard hears about a new app that allows you to find a well-matched roommate as well as pick back-ups in the case that your first roommate does not mesh well with you and makes an account.

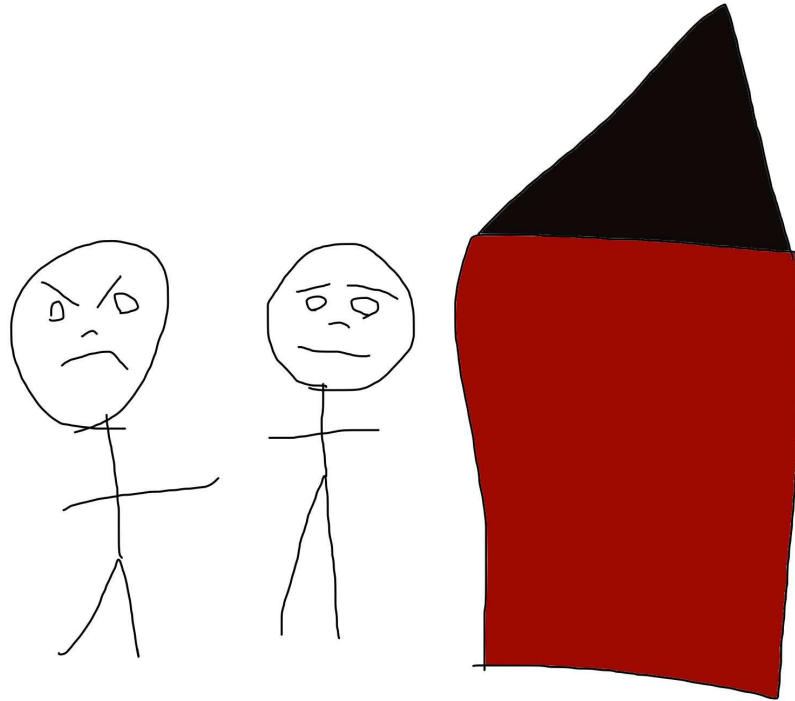

Richard has a much wider assortment of roommates, the ability to include more information about himself, and the ability to choose several roommates as back-ups so that in case his first choice does not go well, he will have options left to him.

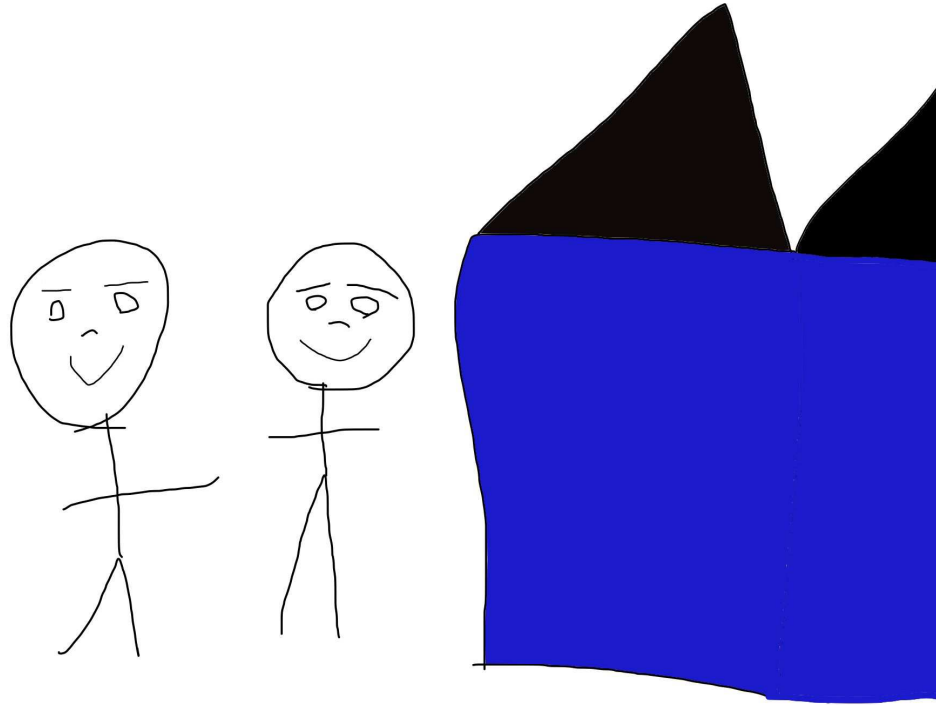

Richard chooses an apartment with his first choice roommate and makes arrangements to live there

Richard interacts with his roommate but decides that they do not mesh well together.

Richard finally finds a roommate that he enjoys living with and is happy with his decisions, knowing he never would've had such control over the situation had he left it in the university's hands

Thomas is in high school and just got accepted by his dream college. Now he is going through the acceptance process and he is on the roommate selection section, and is stressing about who to choose.

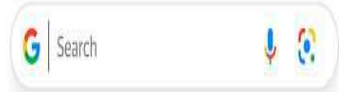

He is using the schools roommate selection process and is frustrated about how bad the user interface is.

Thomas tries to go through facebook and post that he is looking for a roommate for the college he is attending.

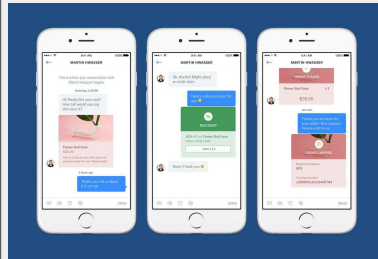

Thomas had no luck on facebook, the only responses he had were from peoples mom's and he felt like he couldn't get a a good idea on who he was rooming with.

Thomas was fed up and angrily thought to himself that there had to be a better way of choosing a roommate. So he looked up, "Roommate Finder" on google.

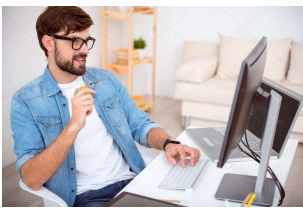

Thomas found the Roommate Finder app on google and decided to download the app. Thomas really enjoyed the user interface and the type of personality questions it asked on the app;

Thomas matched with a few people and narrowed it down to one person through the chat feature

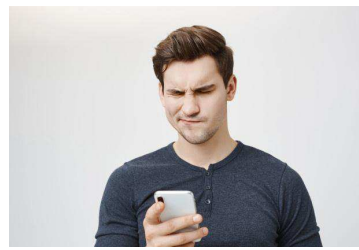

Thomas and the roommate he met go on to become really good friends, and they are even better roommates.

After graduating college and wanting to pursue a higher degree. Tom needs to find new roommates to live with.

Tom asks around his old group of friends but finds that none of them are pursuing a higher degree.

After talking to his friends he hears about an app that can match people together to live with each other.

Without any other options Tom downloads the roommate finder app in hopes of finding a roommate.

After looking through the app at potential roommates. Tom finds a Match.

Tom and his possible roommate meet up and hit it off and are on their way to becoming roommates.
